

Plays at Waldorf School

Eitan Kalmanovich and Roy Biran

This article reviews the field of drama and plays at Waldorf School. This significant area of Waldorf education is applied at almost every age and in every class, but differently, depending on the child's development. The article reviews this variability and examines how it is customary to see the plays over the years from first to 12th grade. The article also examines some fundamental aspects of the work of the class, educator and director in this field at the school.
